It all started early morning when I was leaving for work. I remember it was at the table when I was having breakfast. It looked odd in some way but I didn't give it much thought other than it should be doing that for some reason. As I hurried off to finish, the phone rang; it was my cousin telling me that he could not make it over Thursday and that we had to re-schedule. I took my eyes off it as I went to find my calendar; when I returned I swear it had moved, not by a lot, but enough that I registered it. By that time, I didn't give it much thought as I continue the conversation with my cousin. It wasn't after I was about to leave that I saw it glow; a strange eerie warm light started to emanate from it. It was invisible but palpable and it seemed to cloud my vision. In an instant I began to feel rage, like I was being possessed by this uncontrollable anger. I could not control my thoughts; I only cared about destruction and revenge.

When I regained consciousness I noticed that a few days had passed and I was no longer at my house. I think I ended up in the back room of a bar or coffee shop but I didn't stick around to find out.

This sounds implausible and a little farfetched. Can you describe this object that you claim made all of this possible?

I know it sounds strange and something made-up but it did happen. As for a description of the item, it looks like some sort of primitive human statue if you look at it from the right angle.
